Copy, Personalize, and Send to Your Family

Instructions: Copy the letter below into an email or text message. Fill in the blanks with your family's details. Send it to siblings, your spouse, or anyone else involved in the transition. Getting everyone aligned early prevents 80% of the conflict that derails families later.

Tip: You can also upload this to your SeniorSafe document vault at app.seniorsafeapp.com so everyone can reference it later.

SUBJECT LINE: Important — [Mom/Dad]'s Transition Plan

Hi everyone,

I want to loop you all in on something I've been thinking about — and working on — regarding [Mom/Dad]'s living situation.

As you know, [briefly describe the situation — e.g., "Dad's health has been declining" or "Mom's house is becoming too much for her to maintain" or "we've been talking about next steps for a while now"]. I've been doing some research and I found a comprehensive system called the Senior Transition Blueprint that walks families through the entire process — from the first conversation all the way through to being settled in the next home.

I purchased it and I've started working through it. It covers everything:

- How to approach the conversation with [Mom/Dad] without causing a fight
- Decluttering and sorting the house (they have a system that actually works)
- What repairs to make and what to skip (this alone could save us $15,000+)
- Financial and legal preparation (POA, wills, Medicaid if needed)
- How to evaluate senior living communities and spot red flags
- The home sale — including how to avoid getting taken advantage of by cash buyers
- Move coordination, settling in, and long-term check-ins

It was created by Ryan Riggins, who has 8+ years of experience in construction and real estate investing. He actually used to be on the investor side of these transactions (buying houses from families like ours) and switched sides to help families protect themselves. His background means he knows exactly what repairs are worth doing, which ones are a waste of money, and how to spot a bad deal.

Here's what I'm asking:

1. Please read this email so you know what I'm working on and why.

2. I'd love your input on [Mom/Dad]'s situation — what you've noticed, what concerns you, what you think should happen.

3. Let's get on the same page before we try to have any big conversations with [Mom/Dad]. The Blueprint has a family meeting guide that I think would help us avoid the kind of disagreements that make this harder than it needs to be.

I'm not trying to take over or make decisions for everyone. I just don't want us to end up in a situation where we're making rushed decisions because we didn't plan ahead. I've seen too many families lose money, time, and relationships because nobody took the lead.

I also set up an app called SeniorSafe (app.seniorsafeapp.com) where we can store important documents, coordinate as a family, and set up a daily check-in so we know [Mom/Dad] is okay without having to call every day. I'll send you an invite once I have it set up.

Can we set up a time to talk this week? Even 20 minutes on the phone would help.

Love,

[Your Name]

P.S. — If you want to look at the Blueprint yourself, it's at seniortransitionblueprint.com ($47 for the complete system). And Ryan's book The Unheard Conversation ($9.99 on Amazon) is specifically about how to have the conversation [Mom/Dad] keeps shutting down. Both are worth the read.

TIPS FOR SENDING THIS LETTER

- Send it to everyone involved — siblings, your spouse, anyone who will play a role in the transition. Leaving someone out creates resentment.
- Send it before any family meeting — let people absorb it individually before discussing as a group.
- Don't send it to the senior yet — get the family aligned first, then approach [Mom/Dad] together with a unified message.
- Expect mixed reactions — some siblings will be relieved, some will be defensive, some won't respond at all. That's normal. The goal is planting the seed, not getting instant agreement.
- Follow up in 3-5 days — if someone hasn't responded, a simple "Did you get a chance to read my email?" is enough.
